April 8th, 1756. [Numb. 1137.]

The SOUTH-CAROLINA Gazette.

The CURE for the Bites of a RATTLE-SNAKE, as discovered by Sampson, a Negro: For which Discovery the Province purchased his Freedom, and allows him an Annuity.

TAKE Heart Snake-Root, both Root and Leaves, two Handfuls, Polypody Leaves one Handful, bruise them in a Mortar, press out a Spoonful of the Juice, and give as soon as possible after the Bite; then scarify the Wound, and take the Root of the Herb Avens, bruise it, pour a little Rum over it, and apply to the Part, over which is to be put the Heart Snake-Root and Polypody which remains after the Juice is squeez'd out. These Medicines and Applications must be repeated according to the Violence of the Symptoms, so as in some dangerous Cases it must be given to the Quantity of eight Spoonfuls in an Hour, and the Wound dressed two or three Times in a Day.

The above Herbs may also be bruised and beat up into a Paste with Clay, and when necessary may be scraped down to the Quantity of half a common Spoonful, and given amongst a little Rum and Water, and repeated as the Doses of the Juice above mentioned. A little of this Paste may be wet with Rum and rubbed over the Wound.

N.B. He always uses this Method when he can't find the green Herbs.

Sometimes the Cure is entirely performed by the Patient's chewing the Heart Snake-Root, and swallowing the Juice, and applying some of the same Herb bruised to the Wound.

When the Part is greatly inflamed and swelled, all the Herbs in the following List are taken to the Quantity of some Handfuls of each, and boiled into a strong Decoction, with which it is to be fomented several Times a Day.

The HERBS presented last by Sampson, are

1. Asarum cyclimini folio, or, Heart Snake-Root of this Province.
2. Polypodium vulgare, or, common Polypody.
3. Caryophyllata Virginiana radice inodora, or, Virginian Avens, called here Five Fingers.
4. Lonchitis aspera, or rough Spleenwort.
5. Hypnum julaceum, or, small erect Club-Moss.
6. Gnaphalium humile, or, creeping goldy Locks.

Said Sampson is the same Negro who used frequently to go about with Rattle-Snakes in Calabashes, and who would handle them, put them into his Pockets or Bosom, and sometimes their Heads into his Mouth, without being bitten.—— In Proof of the Efficacy of his Medicines, he several Times suffered himself to be bitten by the most venemous Snakes, and once his Wounds to come so near a Mortification, that 'twas doubted whether he could recover, and cured himself with them. — 'Tis said, he disarms any Snake of its Venom with some one of the Herbs; and that chewing the Heart Snake Root, and spitting the Juice upon a Snake will instantly kill it.

From Poor Richard's Almanack, for the Year 1756.

AS I spent some Weeks last Winter, in visiting my old Acquaintance in the Jerseys, great Complaints I heard for Want of Money, and that Leave to make more Paper Bills could not be obtained. Friends and Countrymen, my Advice on this Head shall cost you nothing, and if you will not be angry with me for giving it, I promise you not to be offended if you do not take it.

You spend yearly at least Two Hundred Thousand Pounds, 'tis said, in European, East-Indian, and West-Indian Commodities: Supposing one Half of this Expence to be in Things absolutely necessary, the other Half may be called Superfluities or at best, Conveniences, which however you might live without for one little Year, and not suffer exceedingly. Now to save this Half, observe these few Directions.

1. When you incline to have new Cloaths, look first well over the old Ones, and see if you cannot shift with them another Year, either by Scouring, Mending, or even Patching if necessary. Remember, a Patch on your Coat, and Money in your Pocket, is better and more creditable than a Writt on your Back, and no Money to take it off.

2. When you incline to buy China Ware, Chints, India Silks, or any other of their flimsey slight Manufactures; I would not be so hard with you, as to insist on your absolutely resolving against it; all I advise, is, to put it off (as you do your Repentance) till another Year; and this, in some Respects, may prevent an Occasion of Repentance.

3. If you are now a Drinker of Punch, Wine or Tea, twice a Day; for the ensuing Year drink them but once a Day. If you now drink them but once a Day, do it but every other Day. If you do it now but once a Week, reduce the Practice to once a Fortnight. And if you do not exceed in Quantity as you lessen the Times, half your Expence in these Articles will be saved.

4thly and lastly, When you incline to drink Rum, fill the Glass half with Water.

Thus at the Year's end, there will be an Hundred Thousand Pounds more Money in your Country.

If Paper Money in ever so great a Quantity could be made, no Man could get any of it without giving something for it. But all he saves in this Way, will be his own for nothing; and his Country actually so much richer. Then the Merchants old and doubtful Debts may be honestly paid off, and Trading become surer thereafter, if not so expensive.

Quere, Whether the Advice given above, ought not be taken by the Inhabitants of this Province, as well as those of the Jerseys?

From the ANTIGUA GAZETTE, or Public Advertiser, Febr. 3*d*, 1756.

ON Sunday arrived here the sloop Paragon, John Thibou master, who sail'd from hence the 3d of December last for Cape-François, with a flag of truce from His excellency, having on board a French jesuit, and two ladies, lately taken in the Duc d'Acquitaine by commodore Frankland's squadron: From him we have the following Particulars.

He arrived at the Cape the 11th of December, 1755, and applying to governor Chatteroye, delivered him the letter from his excellency general Thomas, and also shewed him his Commission. After having transacted it, he answered, that as war was not declared, he did not look upon it as a truce, but as a vessel come to trade: He told him there was an absolute necessity for detaining him until he received an answer from the general-governor residing at Porto Prince in the night of Leogan, the post arriving from thence every 10th day. —The captain found, that the reason for this was as follows: A French frigate, which had landed troops and warlike stores on that part, then lay there, with 25 troops and stores on board for Porto Prince, and was bound from thence to the Mississippi, with 50 Swiss troops and stores for the garrisons there; but as two of our men of war, who had taken some of their ships, and cut one out of Porto Paix since the captain's arrival, were then cruizing off Cape Nichola, they imagined that if he sail'd [illegible] would run down and inform them of her coming out, as they ſailed in her track, ſo that, in his opinion, they could hardly miſs her. They exclaim greatly againſt governor Knowles, and ſay the ſhips would not have cruized there but by his orders. They have now at Cape François upwards of 300 ſail of ſhips, ſeveral of which are ready to ſail, but afraid to put out. Their king's ſloop, which guards the coaſt, narrowly eſcaped being taken by one of our ſhips in her paſſage from Porto Prince to this cape. The French at this cape are making all due preparations againſt an invaſion: They have 400 negroes at work entrenching round the cape, ſeveral mechanics employed in repairing their gariſons, others making new carriages for their guns, which are, he ſays, as good as ever he ſaw. Their fortreſs, at the entrance of this port, mounts 42 thirty-two pounders, another ſmall battery within that mounts 18 eighteen pounders, the walls thereof ſlight and of no great thickneſs, and lying under the declivity of a hill, ſo that a few broadſides from our ſhips would choak up their cannon with the ruins of their walls behind, which would do more execution than our ſhot. A number of ſhips of war may eaſily paſs theſe two forts, as the diſtance is but ſhort, by taking the advantage of a freſh ſea breeze, which comes in about 10 in the morning, and at times blows very hard. After theſe dangers are paſt, a-breaſt of the town are 54 eighteen pounders to play againſt, level with the ſea, in a line at the head of the town, their walls and embraſures but ſlight. There is nothing more to obſtruct but the inhabitants, which, excluding the troops, when they mounted guard on Chriſtmas-eve, were 4000: They have amongſt their troops many Swiſs, who, as they have told the abovementioned captain, would willingly exchange their ſervice for the Engliſh, their pay being ſmall. Cape François is a pleaſant town, but very ſickly, and moſtly foggy, owing to its being ſeated under the high land: Their buildings are low but pleaſant; it abounds in freſh proviſions, roots, and greens, the canes in common are 12 and 14 feet long, and very thick. Price of ſugar 20 ſhillings per cent, melaſſes 18 s. per Engliſh hogſhead, rum at 6 l. per ditto, indico 10s. 6d. per pound, coffee 6d. per ditto. The captain, as a ſubject of Great-Britain, thought it his duty to inform himſelf of the ſtate of the French affairs, and made it his buſineſs to enquire into every thing of which he here gives an account. They are building ſome ſmall forts along the coaſt, one at Porto Paix, and others at places where there is a convenience of landing. There are three principal officers in this town, viz. the governor, who at the arrival of every ſhip from Africa, (of which a great number come here annually) has the choice of the beſt ſlave on board, as his perquiſite; the lieutenant du Roi, next in poſt to the governor; next to him the town major: Several others hold poſts under them. On the 27th of December he was permitted to ſail, having had the whole time he was there a detachment of ſoldiers, with an officer, on board, and not permitted to go on ſhore, but when ſent for by the governor, in cuſtody of the ſerjeant-major, who would not permit him even to ſtop in the ſtreets. No perſon nor boat durſt come on board their veſſel, nor durſt any of their people go out of it. All nations whatever, except French, were impriſoned if found in their town; the captain of a Spaniſh ſloop was put in priſon, and kept there during pleaſure, for having guns on board. Capt. Thibou complained to the governor, that it was very hard to make him priſoner on board his own veſſel, and not to ſuffer even a boat to go on board with a few refreſhments; but was anſwered, that he had reaſons for it. Guard-boats row all night round the harbour, hailing every ſhip they paſs by, and calling out to them to keep a good watch, in order to prevent fires amongſt them, for the veſſels lie as cloſe to each other as the trees in a wood. He was ſupplied with ſome bread, water, and wood, by the governor, who took nothing for them.

The entrance into this harbour, or rather baſon, is ſomewhat dangerous; the eaſtermoſt part of it is environed with an iron-bound reef, which, with the cape, forms the channel, in which, on the cape-ſide, and when thro' the paſſage, are ſeveral banks; on theſe they have log buoys, and flag ſtaffs fixed thereon for the hoiſting of ſmall flags: On the firſt, on the ſtarboard hand, is a red one; farther ſoutherly are banks on which they have both blue and white ones continually flying, as marks for their ſhips coming in. They had in going in 5, and not leſs than 3 fathom water.

Capt. Thibou ſays, that on the 5th of December, the Daniſh commodore obliged him to ſtrike his Engliſh flag, by ſending ſome officers in the barge, on board his ſloop: He looking upon this as an indignity, waited on the commodore, expoſtulated with him, and aſked him where he ſhould hoiſt his flag? the commodore replied, 'under his bowſprit:' Captain Thibou then ſaid, His Maſter the King of England, was Sovereign of the Sea, to which the other anſwered, 'He was not the better Man for that,' and inſiſted on his paying for the ſhot which had been fired at his veſſel.

The captain moreover ſays, that during his ſtay at Cape François, five French ſhips were taken by the Engliſh men of war of commodore Coates's ſquadron, cruizing in thoſe parts.

The FRENCH Account of the Battle of Monongahela, as publiſhed in a Letter from Paris, dated October 10, 1755.

SINCE the return of M. Dubois de la Mothe's ſquadron, we have letters from Canada concerning the battle fought the 9th of July laſt near the Ohio, which contain the moſt eſſential particulars of that action. In theſe letters it is ſaid, that the Engliſh to the number of 2000, advancing towards fort Duqueſne, in order to beſiege it. M. de Contrecœur, commandant of that fort, had intelligence of their march; upon which he held a council with Meſſrs. de Beaujeu and Dumas, captains of the marines, and ſome other officers, and the reſult was, to march towards the enemy, when they were but 3 leagues from the fort. Thoſe officers immediately ſet out with 250 Canadians and 650 Indians. They met the Engliſh in the open field, and attack'd them very gallantly, notwithſtanding the fire of their connon and ſmall arms, they bore a diſcharges of it, which kill'd Meſſrs. de Beaujeau, de la Parade, and Carneville, as alſo 15 Indians and 4 Canadians. This fire did indeed diſconcert the Indians a little, and even made them give ground, but they quickly came on again, ſeeing themſelves headed by M. Dumas, who, as the eldeſt captain, took the command command in the room of M. Beaujeu. The Indians and Canadians, under this new chief, ruſhed furiouſly upon the enemy, without giving them time to load again, and with their little hatchets, which they call ſkull breakers, made a great ſlaughter of the Engliſh troops. As for the Indians on the enemy's ſide, being about 300 in number, few of them were killed, becauſe they ran away at the beginning of the battle. It is reckoned, that the Engliſh loſt near 1500 men, a good part of whom were killed on their flight; thoſe who could eſcape, were glad to get away without arms or proviſions. We found on the field of battle four braſs cannon 12-pounders, and two of the ſame metal 6-pounders, four mortars of 6 inches and an half diameter, and three others of 3 inches and a quarter, 275 cannon balls of 12 lb. ſeventeen haubitzers of 6 inches and 3 quarters diameter, 17 quintals of gun-powder, 17,140 muſket cartridges, the implements neceſſary for a ſiege, a great number of muſkets, many broken waggons, 400 horſes, 100 caſks, many ſtaved barrels of powder, ſome ball full, and the reſt ſcattered about the field; beſides a conſiderable booty in cloaths, furniture and utenſils, and divers papers, amongſt which were the inſtructions and plan of the expedition, ſigned by the late M. de la Queſne. And moreover, our people diſcovered, by means of three Engliſh deſerters, ſeveral pieces of cannon, barrels of powder, powder, and other warlike ſtores, which had been artfully enough hid after the battle.

However, it is to be noted, that the court has not yet publiſhed any account of the affair; perhaps our miniſtry wait for a more circumſtantial or authentic account.
